

MAX EHRMANN

Whose forthcoming new book is to be called "Breaking Home Ties."

THE HAUTE MAGAZINE

Published at Terre Haute, Indiana

By The Nall-Baird Company

Application made at the Postoffice at Terre Haute, Indiana, for admission as second-class mail matter.

VOL. I

APRIL, 1904

No. 1

TO FRIENDS AND PATRONS

THE Haute Magazine makes its first appearance in a modest way, attempting to cover an entirely new field in Terre Haute journalism, and hopes to meet equal favor and patronage with magazines of the same class in other cities of comparative size.

The initiatory number is necessarily limited in Terre Haute because of the short time of preparation. The "Calendar of Events," which will be a leading feature, could not be prepared; some of the articles under preparation are not yet completed; many pictures arranged for, could not be finished by the photographers.

The aim of the magazine is to stimulate interest in, and give personality to Terre Haute and Vigo county art, literature, education, society, business and industry, and give personage to the promoters of these attributes of higher living.

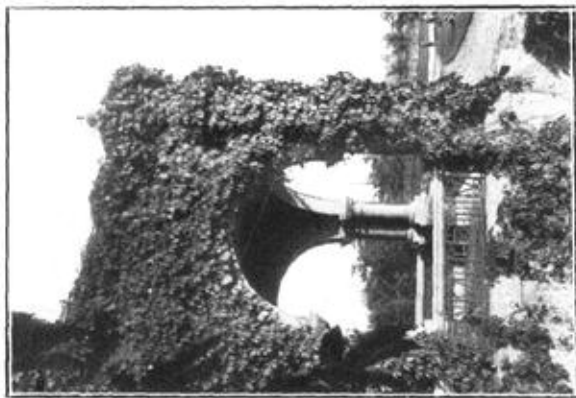

The historical cover design made by Professor Cowan, deserves special mention. It has already received great praise as a work of pen art. Old Fort Harrison will be at once recognized, and the admirers of the great Daniel Voorhees will appreciate the sycamore tree in the foreground. The design revives the memory of the historical importance of Terre Haute in the war of 1812, and one of the great men Terre Haute has produced, "The Tall Sycamore of the Wabash."

We desire to thank those who have and are kindly assisting in bringing the magazine up to the standard of our plans for it.

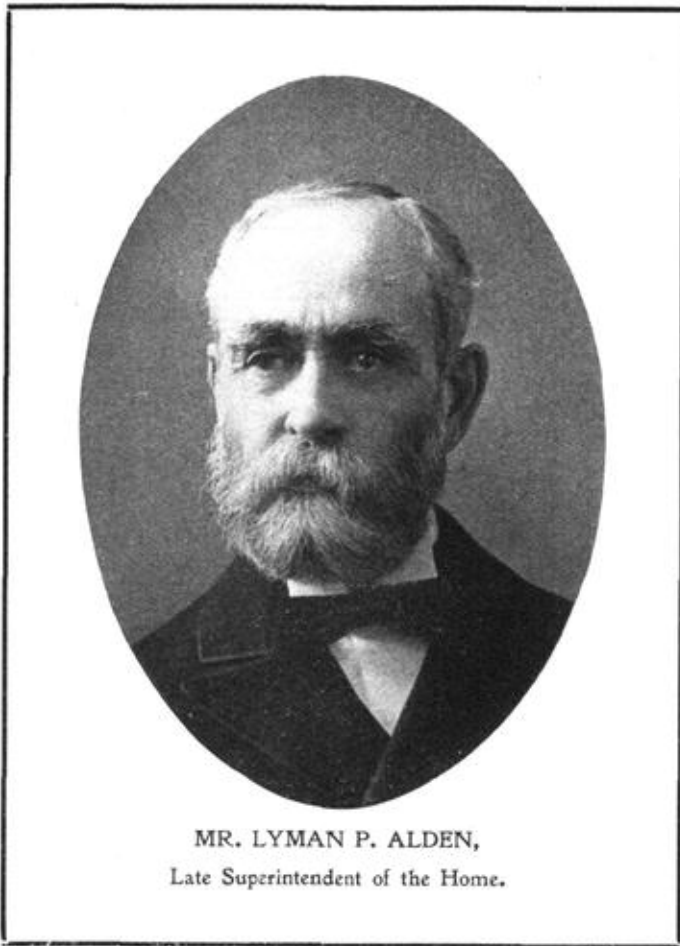

THE PUBLISHER.

THE ROSE ORPHANS' HOME

A View of the Portico at the Main Entrance of the Home

MR. LYMAN P. ALDEN,
Late Superintendent of the Home.

THE ROSE ORPHANS' HOME

THE Rose Orphans' Home, named for Mr. Chauncey Rose, who founded it and endowed it, is situated at the intersection of Wabash avenue and Twenty-fifth street, about one and one-half miles from Terre Haute's business center. The Home is easily reached by the cars of the Terre Haute Electric Company, which pass it every twelve minutes.

The grounds comprise twenty acres of very valuable land, about eight acres of which are devoted to lawns and building purposes and the remainder to farming and gardening. The Home is bounded on all four sides by streets.

The lawns are beautifully graded and are ornamented by twenty-seven different varieties of shade trees, many of which are now attaining magnificent proportions. A fountain, winding walks and drives, and numerous flower beds, together with the ivy vines that profusely cover the buildings, make a tout ensemble of unusual beauty. There are few institutions in the world, of a like character, which compare with it in this respect and in the architecture and general artistic grouping of the buildings, of which there are nine in number. The style of architecture of the entire group may be called a modern rendering of the "Queen Anne," belonging to the latter part of the seventeenth century. The buildings consist of an administration building, a chapel, schoolhouse, three cottages, engine house, with laundry overhead, a barn and icehouse. All are brick, except the icehouse, are roofed with slate, furnished with gas and are heated by steam. The chapel and schoolhouse are connected with the administration building by corridors, all three of these buildings are constructed of red pressed brick, richly ornamented with white Bedford stone.

They are supplied with most of the modern improvements suggested by the latest ideas in institutional life, and are probably not surpassed by any child's institution, in this respect.

The system is that of the family and congregate combined. The children live in the cottages, over which is a house mother, but they attend school together, and take their meals together in a common dining room in the main building. The laundry work, sewing and cooking are all done in separate buildings.

All orphan and half orphan children who have resided in Vigo County for six consecutive months, prior to admission, and who are sound in body and mind, and not incorrigible, and who are between the ages of three and fourteen, are admissible to the Home.

It is the object of the institution to find good homes for the children in the country, as rapidly as possible, although there are many cases where it is found advisable to keep certain ones in the Home for a considerable length of time until bad habits or traits can be overcome and higher ideas of life instilled into them.

The Home was opened September 3rd, 1884. Mr. Lyman P. Alden was chosen superintendent. He had been for a number of years superintendent of the Michigan State Public School for Dependent Children, at Coldwater, which institution, under his wise management, became known throughout the world as a model of its kind, and after which all other State institutions of a similar character have been patterned.

Mr. Alden came to Terre Haute before the buildings of the home were completed, and his broad experience in institutional work was of great value in helping to provide perfect sanitary conditions and in many other ways. He personally saw to the planting of every tree, of which there are between two and three hundred, to the grading of the grounds, and to the laying out of all the walks and drives.

The health of the institution has been most remarkable. According to the last Triennial Report, dated September 30th, 1901, Dr. W. R. Elder, who has been the physician for the Home since its beginning, twenty years ago, stated that there had never been a case of dysentery, typhoid fever, or