In October, 1924, it was decided to hold a Benny Popularity Contest in order to make money to aid in financing the Benedictus. So—it was done! A committee composed of Orville Evans, Lawrence Baxter, Fred Andrews, Max Allen, Perna Frazier, and Martha Church, aided by Miss Nelle Duncan, Senior Faculty Adviser, took charge of the contest. Votes were very inexpensive; five votes could be purchased for the grand total of one cent.

Great interest was manifested in the contest which lasted for about six weeks. In practically every case, the race was close with the winners undecided until the final day of the contest. Eugenia Anderson's right to the title of Prettiest Girl was hotly contested by the admirers of Magdalen Coopridier, and Lawrence Baxter was a close second in the popular choice for Everybody's Friend, the title won by Norma Thomas. In each contest several people were voted upon and, in some cases, the competition between the followers and backers of the entrants was very spirited with no person leading by a very great number of votes. Some "dark horses" appeared and in the final moments nosed out some of the contestants, who had seemed to have a clear field.

Much enjoyment was derived from the Benny Popularity Contest, but, best of all, it was a great financial success. Approximately $62.00 was realized. This money was turned over to the "Benny Fund."

We had expected to print the pictures of all the winners, in the Benny, but we were unable to persuade them to have a picture made, due to their excessive modesty.
